Valya Balkanska was born in the village of Arda, in the Rhodope Mountains. She was soloist with the Smolyan Folk Ensemble for many years and is a living legend both in Bulgaria and among Bulgarians living outside their native land. She is currently on a 15-city tour throughout North America.

On August 20 and September 5, 1977, two spacecrafts called Voyager were launched to the stars. After exploring the outer solar system from Jupiter to Uranus between 1979 and 1986 they left the solar system, emissaries of earth to the realm of the stars. Affixed to each Voyager craft is a gold-coated copper phonograph record as a message to possible extraterrestrial civilizations that might encounter the spacecraft some distant time and space. Each record contains 118 photographs of our planet, ourselves, and our civilization; almost 90 minutes representing the diversity of our world's music; an evolutionary audio essay "The Sounds of Earth"; and greetings in almost 60 human languages (and one whale language). The piece "Izlel e Delyu haydutin" sung by Valya Balkanska recorded in Smolyan, Bulgaria by Martin Koenig and Ethel Raim in the summer of 1968, is one of 27 musical selections included on the Voyager spacecraft. It was selected for the Voyager by a panel composed of Alan Lomax, Bob Brown and Carl Sagan. Be sure to check out Valya's music and this particular song online.

VALYA BALKANSKA: The Cosmic Voice of Bulgaria's Rhodope Mountains is a concert featuring Valya Balkanska and bagpiper, Petar Yanev in Seattle at the Russian Hall and Community Center, 704 19th Avenue E, Seattle, WA 98112 on Friday, May 20, at 8pm (doors open at 7:30).
